PROTESTERS PUSH CIA RECRUITERS OFF CAMPUS
EUGENE, ORE.

Protesters opposing a Central Intelligence Agency visit to the University of Oregon prompted the CIA interviewers to move off campus, school officials said.

About 50 people attended a rally held by the War Resistance and Draft Information Center at the Erb Memorial Union onday afternoon to oppose both the CIA's recruiting trip and the agency's activities in Central America, said Larry H. Smith, director of career planning and placement at the school.

"I think they decided that discretion was the better part of valor and they would move off campus," Smith said.

The CIA interviews had been scheduled throughout the day at the Career Planning and Placement offices in Hendricks Hall, across the street from the student union building. Smith said the interviewers had told no one, including him, where their new location was.

On a typical annual recruiting trip, the CIA officials see 10 to 12 students a day, Smith said. The agents are spending two days at the university this year, he said.

Smith added that the university has no plans to change its policy regarding the agency's right to recruit on campus.
